FACTS ABOUT WINSLOW, HOLBROOK AND NAVAJO COUNTY

One of the fourteen counties of Arizona, with an area of 9899 square miles and a population of 21,191, Navajo County extends from the Utah state line on the north more than two hundred and twenty-five miles southward, and within its boundaries are found natural wonders and scenic grandeur seldom embraced in one restricted area.

All of the great industries of the state, except mining, are active in the county, the most prominent being transportation, livestock raising and agriculture.

Navajo county possesses some of the most beautiful mountain scenery to be found in the world, and there are many other interesting scenic attractions. Chief among these is the Petrified Forest near the eastern boundary, eighteen miles east of Holbrook. Then there is the world-famous Painted Desert stretching across the north central portion of the county.

The county also is the home of the Hopi Indians who dwell on the high mesas in the northern section of the county. The villages of Walpi, Toreva, Oraibi, Hotevilla and others contain the remnants of this highly civilized Indian who is famous over the entire world for his weird Snake Dance, baskets and earthen pottery. Stretching across the entire northern portion of the county is the Navajo Indian Reservation where the famous Navajo Blanket is woven.

WINSLOW

Winslow is the largest city in the county and in northern Arizona. A division point on the Santa Fe railway, and a shipping point for cattle, sheep, wool and Indian wares, it holds an enviable position as a business center in northern Arizona. The railroad shops and division offices of the Santa Fe contribute greatly to the industrial importance of the city, which is also a division point and regular stop on the Transcontinental-Western Air lines, the only regular passenger and airmail stop in northern Arizona.

La Posada, latest "jewel" of the Fred Harvey system, is located at Winslow, from which Harveycar tours are made daily.

HOLBROOK

Holbrook, the county seat, is the Hub City of the county from which point mail is distributed to 43 post offices in northeastern Arizona. Highways lead into the city from six different directions and it is the point of intersection of U. S. Highways 66 and 70. It is also the northern terminal of the Apache Railway which carries the great lumber output of the McNary and Standard mills to the main line railroad.
